So I took their advice and went to Dwight, determined to give the treatment a trial. Up a arriving at the institute the official inquired as to what had been my habits—whether I had become adicted to drinking diquors, taking morph per or origing or moving clears or morph ue or opium, or smosing cigars or cigarettes. I replied that I had been a steady drinker of liquors for eight or ten years. He then commenced the treatment. He gave what is called a 'shot.' "What kind of a 'shot?"" "Well, it is a hyperdermic injection of bi-chloride of gold in the left arm. This injection causes no particular sensation. It is accompanied by taking some kind of medicine every two hours. In fact the routine of the treatment is simply this: First thing in the morning take medicine, then breakfast, then a 'shot' at 8 o'clock, medicine every two hours, another 'shot' at noon and another at 7:30 in the evening."

at noon and another at the ready of the institute, and the patients standing ready for the "shot." It is a curious picture. The patients are arranged in four rows, with one doctor at the head of each row. The left arms are all bared and, as the injection takes but a second, the work is soon over.

"No: because, as I have said, the very smell of it makes me inclined to gag. I look upon liquor with a kind of horror. If have no ill feeling sgainst my companions who continue to take their drinks; but II have no ill feeling sgainst my companions who continue to take their drinks; but II have a profound sympathy for the man who is doing what food has given me courage to withstand, I hope, forever. During my three weeks' treatment, I saw many end scenes. I saw some of the most brillant men brought to the institute from all parts of this and other countries through the curse of the drinking habit—a habit which might have been, in many cases, inherited." Those who get through with the treatment, which lasts for a period of three treatment, which lasts for a period of the teratment the patients have gone through. The dectors had guaranteed to cure the liquor drinks ing habit. By the patient's own admission they had been cureed. They are now as they were when children, a period when they did not know the taste of liquor. They could, of course, afters ome monts, create a new appetite for liquor, but the lecturer asserts that not one in a hundred ever returns to the habit. Those who had returned had THE KELLY CURE like themselves in nine cases out of ten. If the desire should return, the patients are advised to send to the institute for medicine to thwart the desire.

The expense of his treatment for three weeks was $75, and board and lodgings can be had as cheap in Dwight as anywhere else.

Take the YOST for instance. We have taken the most stubborn believers in other typewrit-ers and have convinced them that the two great feature of the YOST, the ink pad instead of ribbon and the center-guide alignment, were likely to revolutionize typewriters.

Conclusive proofs did the work. Conclusive proofs also established the belief that the minor improvements and features al-embloned to make up a perfect typewriter.

In the point of economy the most conclusive proofs are the words of these who have used the Yost longest. There is one machine in Sais Lake that was used over two years without one cent being spent in repairs or ink-pads—and it was in use every day during that time, except-ing Sundays and holidays.

These are the kind of proofs we like to show Dear reader, conclusive proofs that the YOST does better work and does it longer than any other typewriter; that the YOST is the most durable, has highest speed and highest mani-foiding power; that it is the most eccaminated of all typewriters; that it is the nearest to perfec-tion in writing machines; someinsive proofs of
